ABSTRACT

This thesis argues that the chairmen of the defense-related committees in the House and Senate continue to wield enormous power offer defense legislation.

This thesis is based on a detailed empirical analysis of the fate of amendments offered to the defense authorization and appropriation bills from 1981-1992. To measure the power of the chairmen, the thesis assesses how often their positions were sustained on floor amendments. Data also is analyzed on which members tended to offer amendments, whether the passage rate was higher for amendments that did not alter defense spending, and a variety of related issues.

It was found that on 95.53% of amendments offered to defense authorization bill in the Senate and 95.1% in the House, the full Senate and House voted in accordance with the preference of the chairmen of their respective Armed Services Committees. An even higher percentage of victory (96.1) was achieved by the chairmen of the House and Senate Defense Appropriations Subcommittees. Data analysis shows that when amendments are offered to defense legislation, committee chairmen still call the shots.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF NAVAL POSTGRADUATE SCHOOL THESIS

This thesis argues that the Chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, Senator Sam Nunn (D-Ga) and Representative Les Aspin (D-Wi) wield considerable power over defense budgeting in their respective houses of Congress. The current political science literature on the subject claims the opposite: in particular, the chairmen have been losing power since the mid-1970's because their legislation has been amended increasingly often on the House and Senate floor.

Amendment data can provide an important indication of a chairman's influence. No chairman wants to see his legislation altered by any amendment he opposes. However, little empirical work has been done using recent amendment voting to test the widespread notion that chairmen are losing power. Thus a detailed empirical analysis of the fate of amendments to the defense authorization and appropriations bills from 1981-1992 was conducted. To measure the power of the chairmen, the thesis assessed how often their positions were sustained on floor amendments.

Also, the data was analyzed on which members tended to offer amendments, whether the passage rate was higher for amendments that did not alter defense spending and a variety of related issues. Analysis included the total number of amendments offered in both the Senate and the House to Defense Authorization Bills. Evaluated as a block over the whole period and on a year by year basis, the data was analyzed and compared who offered the amendment, whether it was offered by a Republican or a Democrat, and whether it was offered by a committee member or a non-committee member. Next the thesis examined and compared the passage rates of Republican versus Democrat amendments and the passage rates of committee member versus non-committee member amendments. The last thing that studied on the Authorization Bills was the chair's position regarding the amendments that passed, were rejected and the total of the two added together.

The thesis contends the main reason that the chairmen still have power is the total percentage of the chair's vote. The total of the chair's vote is the statistic that proves that the chairmen still have power. In the Senate, 95.53% of the time the chairman's vote was the ultimate fate of the amendment. The total of the chairman's vote in the House was just slightly lower at 95.1%.

Thus a final conclusion is that the chairmen of the House and Senate Armed Services Committees and to a lesser extent the chairmen of the Subcommittees on Defense Appropriations still wield a considerable amount of power in the defense budgeting process. This is important for several reasons. First, members in both the House and the Senate should realize this so if they want to get their amendment passed they need to have the support of the chairman. More importantly the Secretary of Defense and the leaders of the four services should understand that when they want something that is very important to them regarding the defense budget, they will primarily have to sell their desires to the chairman and the ranking minority member of the defense committees. They do not have to talk to each and every Senator or Congressman.

I. Introduction

This thesis argues that the Chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, Senator Sam Nunn (D-Ga) and Representative Les Aspin (D-Wi) wield considerable power over defense budgeting in their respective house of Congress. This thesis conflicts with the conventional wisdom in the recent literature on Congress, which argues that after the Vietnam War, the power of committee chairman declined sharply and was defused among more Senators and Representatives. To examine how powerful the chairman are in controlling defenses spending legislation, this thesis conducts an empirical analysis of House and Senate voting on amendments offered to defense authorization legislation during 1981-1992.

The Committee Chairmen who have dealt with the defense budget in both the Senate and the House of Representatives have always played an important role when it comes to shaping our country's defense and our defense policy. Each and every chairman has run his committee his own way. However historic activity within the Senate and House Armed Services Committees can be divided into two eras.

The first era covers the initial 180 years or so of interaction between Congress and the military. During this era the chairman was usually the most informed committeeman and the person the rest of the committee turned to for help. The committees relied on the different branches of the military to provide assistance to the committee to aid them when they were faced with a difficult decision. Basically, though, the man who sat in the committee chairman's seat was the most powerful member of his respective branch of Congress. Other members of Congress did not worry too much about the military unless their district had a military base or a military contractor. The chairman was able to dictate how his respective house voted on defense issues.

The second era emerged at the end of the Vietnam War and after the Watergate scandal. Members of Congress became disillusioned with the way the White House was running the They increasingly became more interested in defense war. This interest increased after Watergate with the issues. election of a new and large freshman class of Representatives and Senators who came in with a new idea on how to run things. They looked to make Congress more influential regarding defense matters. This new group broke some old traditions and this led to the new era. James M. Lindsay, Congress and Nuclear Weapons, and Barry M. Blechman, The Politics of National Security: Congress and U.S. Defense Policy call this era one of power diffusion. They contend that over the last 20 years, power in Congress has been spread out among its members at the expense of committee chairman. They feel that this is especially true with regard to the defense budget.

I disagree with both Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Blechman. believe that today's chairmen, Senator Nunn(D-Ga) and Representative Aspin(D-Wi), both have considerable power and have continued to influence the activity of their respective houses on defense issues. To prove this an empirical analysis of their votes on the amendments that are offered to the bills was conducted. It goes through the last 12 years of Authorization Bills in the House and the last 11 years in the Senate and determines how the committee chair voted and compares that with whether the measure was passed or defeated. Similarly, the thesis also examines the last 11 years of Appropriations bills in the House and Senate. This analysis illustrates that if the chair was in favor of the measure it passed and if he was against it, the measure was either defeated, tabled or withdrawn. In the end, this analysis still proves that the committee chairs do have a lot of power when it comes to the defense budget and defense issues.

II. History and Membership of the Defense Committee

The history of the defense committees in Congress is quite intriguing. The defense committees have played an important role in defense matters over the years. The history of the defense committees can be divided up into two different and distinct eras. Each of the eras has a history all of its own. The dividing point between the two eras is the end of United States involvement in the Vietnam War and Watergate.

During the first era which lasted until 1970, the committees were ruled by strong chairmen who were hawkish on defense matters. Furthermore, the committees themselves were made up of members who themselves were hawks. On most of the important and substantive issues, the defense committees and their chairmen almost always deferred to military expertise. The common belief shared among most of the legislators was best stated by that of long time House Armed Services Committee Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga) that "military men should make military decisions." This belief is a great example of how the defense committees did business in the first era, they trusted the Defense Department and had a good working relationship with the Department of Defense.

Another characteristic of this era is the length of the chairman's reign. An example is Rep. Vinson, who was Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee for nearly three decades.

The functioning of Congressional Committee activity regarding defense policy started to change in the late 60's and early 70's, when large numbers of younger and more liberal members were elected to Congress based on their anti-war positions. Unfortunately, these new members did not have the same trust in the Department of Defense, hence the trust of Congress as a whole started to ebb. The Congress and especially the doves of the House and Senate, who were given a public mandate to change the manner in which Congress affected defense policy, were not that fond of the military and, were now given a good reason to change things. They were not pleased with the way the war was being run by both the Department of Defense and Presidents Johnson and Nixon. They wanted to change the old policies, so they set out to reform bureaucratic activity within Congress.

The first of these reforms came in 1970 with the passage of the Legislative Reorganization Act which was sponsored by the new members of Congress.³ This act revamped and reorganized the committees and the committee process. Junior committee members gained more power and the committees were decentralized. This movement toward decentralization is illustrate by James Lindsay contention that

The dispersion of committee power combined with rising floor pressure to push the committees into more active oversight. [sic] Although the defense committees did not become antimilitary, the automatic deference to military expertise that Vinson and his colleagues knew so will disappeared.⁴

The committees and Congress started to do what they thought was right for the military and the country and stopped using the military as their only source of advice on these matters.

The reforms continued when in 1973 the new members forced the House Democratic Caucus to adopt a Subcommittee Bill of Rights. According to Barry Blechman who in his book states

The new Subcommittee Bill of Rights and the previous reforms greatly limited the power of committee Chairpersons. Also the reforms gave greater authority and resources to subcommittees, ensured more choice assignments for junior members and opened up committee hearings and votes. 5

These reforms took root in Congress in the 1970's. A good example of how the reforms affected the committee process is the fate of former House Armed Services Chairman F. Edward Herbert (D-La). Representative Herbert (D-La), who became chairman in 1970, resisted the changes and it cost him the chairmanship in 1975 to Melvin Price (D-II). Representative Price (D-II) and his counterpart in the Senate, Senator John C. Stennis (D-Miss) embraced the reforms and adopted them. They both incorporated these reforms int their respective committees and ran their committees accordingly.

III.Methodology

In the previous chapter, I contended that the chairmen of the defense committees in both the House and the Senate maintained the power of their predecessors of the first era. I also stated that the chairmen retained this power despite of the congressional reforms in the 1970's. I intend to prove this by conducting a detailed empirical analysis on the fate of amendments offered to the defense bills in both the Senate and House, and how the chairman voted on each amendment. I will look at the Defense Authorization Bills of the House of Representatives from 1981 through 1992 and the Defense Authorization Bills of the Senate from 1981 through 1991.

I found the bills by first looking them up in the Daily Digest issue of The Congressional Record. Once I obtained the bill's number, an example of which is the Defense Authorization for the Senate in 1981 was numbered S815, then I would look it up in the appropriate year of The Congressional Record Index. In the index, I would find out what day the bill was presented by the chairman to its respective body. I would also find out what pages the bill was debated on and what pages of the record I could find the amendments that were offered to the bill. Then I would look the bill up in The Congressional Record, and get started looking up the amendments.

Once I found each and every amendment, I would look for several things. First I would see who offered the amendment and note the Senator or Congressman's name. Next I would then note the subject matter of the amendment. I wanted to determine whether or not the amendment dealt with money, or if it dealt with a non-monetary subject. Sometimes it was not that easy to determine the subject of the amendment. section of The Congressional Record dealing with the Senate it was easier to determine the amendment's subject because the purpose of the amendment was usually given in a paragraph along with the amendment. Otherwise I would have to read the amendment to determine its subject manner, as I had to do with every amendment offered in the House. Usually I could determine the amendments purpose but sometimes it was hard to decipher what the amendment dealt with because of the way it I often suspected that the authors of the was worded. amendments did this on purpose so a layman might not fully understand their amendment. With these amendments, I would read the explanation of the amendment given by the author when it was debated on the floor to find out the purpose of the amendment. The next thing I would do would be to find out the fate of the amendment. I would see if the amendment was accepted or defeated and how it was accepted or defeated. would also record the vote if one was taken to determine its fate. The last thing that I did was determine and record the chairman's position on the amendment.

I did this procedure for each amendment offered for the years 1981 through 1992 in the House and Senate. After I finished and obtained all of my data, I then coded it several ways. First I determined if the amendment dealt with money of not. This is important because the non-money amendments might pass at a higher rate than the money amendments because the chairman will be tougher on amendments that change the financial aspects of his bill. Second, I determined whether or not the amendment was offered by a committee member or a non-committee member. I did this because I wanted to see if committee member amendments passed at a higher rate and also determine if they were supported at a higher rate by the Third, I determined whether the amendment was offered by a Republican or a Democrat. Fourth, I determined if the amendment had been modified before it was accepted or The last thing I coded was the amendment's rejected. disposition(ie. its fate). This was not as easy to code as the other four variables.

The fate of an amendment results in it either being accepted or rejected. However, there is more than just one way to accept an amendment and more than just one way to reject an amendment. In fact there are a total of eleven ways to either accept or reject an amendment. One way is that the amendment was accepted without a vote. In my analysis, during the debate on the amendment if both parities said that they approved of the amendment it was accepted. Since there was no formal vote on these amendments, I coded the chairman's position as in favor of the amendment because most of the time he was the one who said that the amendment was accepted by his party(and because he could have blocked acceptance if had wished). The second type of outcome is when an amendment is rejected by a voice vote. It is significant to note in my analysis that the chairman was always against the amendment. The third outcome is when an amendment is accepted by a roll call vote. The fourth outcome is when an amendment is defeated by a roll call vote. The fifth outcome is when an amendment that is tabled by a roll call vote. The sixth outcome is when an amendment is ordered on the table. only happens on the Senate. Furthermore, these amendments do not even make it to the floor of the Senate. These amendments are coded with respect to the chair's position as the chairman being against the amendment unless the chairman offered the amendment. The seventh outcome is when an amendment is withdrawn by the author who offered it before it can be voted on. The eighth is when an amendment that is accepted after a motion to table it by a roll call vote is defeated. very significant because it shows that the amendment has a lot of support even though someone wants to defeat it by tabling it. The ninth outcome is when an amendment that is rejected on a point of order without a vote. Usually this is an amendment that has no business being offered to a defense bill (ie. an amendment that might deal with the school lunch program). The tenth outcome is an amendment that is rejected on a point of order with a roll call vote sustaining the parliamentarian's ruling. The final outcome is when an amendment is tabled after defeat of a point of order ruling by a roll call vote.

Once I had all the data coded, I entered it into the computer. Then I ran the statistic program on it and analyzed the data, the findings of which will be discussed in the next chapter. In the end, I analyzed the relationship of several significant variables. The first idea that I looked at was the chairman's position on the amendments and the amendments fate. I did this year by year for both the House and the Senate. From this I was able to see how many of the amendments the chairman supported compared to the number that actually passed. I was also able to see how many amendments the chair voted against and how many were actually rejected. Second, I analyzed the chair's position on Republican and Democrat offered amendments and the fate of these amendments. Next I analyzed at the chair's position on committee member amendments versus non-committee member amendments. The last thing I analyzed was the chair's position on money versus nonmoney amendments, modified versus non-modified amendments and their respective fates.

When I was finished analyzing the data, I took the data and recoded it into a new table by year. This table has twenty two columns which cover the chair's voting percentages on the above mentioned amendments. It also contains the passage rate percentages of those amendments. The last three columns are the number of Republican amendments offered, Democrat amendments offered and the total number of amendments offered each year.

IV. The Data

A. Introduction

In this chapter I will report the results of the empirical analysis that was done on the data that was obtained from The Congressional Record. I will analyze the total number of amendments offered in both the Senate and the House to Defense Authorization Bills. I will analyze them as a block over the whole period and on a year by year basis. I will also analyze and compare who offers the amendment, whether it was offered by a Republican or a Democrat, and whether it was offered by a committee member or a non-committee member. Next I will analyze and compare the passage rates of Republican versus Democrat amendments and the passage rates of committee member versus non-committee member amendments. The last thing that I will analyze on the Authorization Bills is the chair's position regarding the amendments that passed, were rejected and the total of the two added together. The last section will be a brief look at the Appropriation Bills from 1981-1991.

B. The Results of the Empirical Analysis on Authorization Bills

1. Total Number of Amendments Offered

a. Senate

Senators offered 1,234 amendments to the Defense Authorization Bills over the period of 1981 through 1991 (Table 1). It should be noted that the period from 1981 through 1986 the Senate Armed Services Committee was controlled by the Republicans. The Democrats controlled the committee since 1987. The Senate Armed Services Committee has had three chairman over this eleven year period. The first chairman was Senator John Tower of Texas. He was chairman from 1981 through 1984. He was followed by Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona who was the chairman for only two years. The next chairman is also the current chairman, Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, who became the chairman in 1987 when the Democrats regained the majority in the Senate.

The total number of amendments fluctuated during the eleven year period from a low total of 21 amendments in 1981 to a high of 234 amendments offered in 1986. The total number of amendments rose each year during Senator Tower's tenure as chairman. As mentioned above, in Senator Tower's first year there were a total of 21 amendments offered. The total number increased in 1982 and again in 1983.

TABLE 1 TOTAL NUMBER OF AMENDMENTS - SENATE

In 1984, Senator Tower's final year as chairman the total rose to 118 amendments. The number of amendments that were offered from 1981 through 1984 increased at a rate of 32.33 per year. This trend stopped in 1985, Senator Goldwater's first year as chairman. In 1985 the total number of amendments offered dropped to 114. But this decline did not last long, in 1986 there were 234 amendments offered. However, 1986 was an aberration because of the 234 amendments offered, 153 were ordered on the table. Only 81 of the amendments that were offered were debated on the floor of the Senate where their fate was decided.

In 1987, the first year of Senator Sam Nunn's (D-Ga) tenure as Chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the total number of amendments came back down to a more normal number of 116. The total number of amendments dropped again in 1988 to 91. But in 1989, the number of amendments offered jumped up to 224. Like 1986, 1989 had a large number, 146, of amendments that were ordered on the table. The number of amendments dropped to 107 in 1990 and 79 in 1991.

b. House

The house offered 1021 amendments to their versions of the Defense Authorization Bills over the period of 1981 through 1992 (Table 2). The Democrats controlled the House and the Armed Services Committee for the whole period.

TABLE 2 TOTAL NUMBER OF AMENDMENTS - HOUSE

However, the Armed Services Committee had two chairman during this span. The first chairman was Rep. Melvin Price of Illinois. His tenure as chairman ended in 1984, when Rep. Les Aspin of Wisconsin was elected as the new chairman at the beginning of the 99th Congress in 1985. The changeover was not done peacefully because Mr. Price was forced out by the liberal wing of the Democratic Party.

The total number of amendments offered per year in the House did not fluctuate as much as it did in the Senate, especially when the 12 year period is broken down into three four year segments. During the first segment, 1981-1984, the total number of amendments ranged from a low of 48 to a high of 74. At the start of the second segment, 1985-1988, there was a large jump in the number of amendments offered to 157, an increase of 92 amendments from the previous year. But when looking at the four year segment alone, there was not a large fluctuation in the number of amendments offered. difference between the high and low of this period was only 32 amendments. Even though the total number of amendments was much higher during this period, there was not a big jump from year to year. The third segment, 1989-1992, was not much different than the first two segments. There was a big drop in amendments from 128 in 1988 to 69 in 1989. The following years leveled out and remained somewhat consistent. The jump in the total number of amendments during the second segment is directly correlated to there being a new chairman in power.

The two parties decided to see what they could get away with a new chairman. The last segment shows that once Rep. Aspin solidified his power the total number of amendments dropped and he controlled the proceedings. This is amplified by the fact that in 1992, 64 of the 78 amendments offered were offered en bloc by Mr. Aspin.

2. Who Offered the Amendments

a. Republicans or Democrats

(1) Senate

The 1,234 amendments that were offered in the Senate over this eleven year period were split evenly between the Republicans and the Democrats(Table 3). The Republicans offered 601 amendments while the Democrats offered 633 amendments. To further analyze this it is important to break the eleven year period into two smaller periods. The first period is 1981 through 1986 when the republicans controlled the Senate. The second period is from 1987 through 1991 when the Democrats controlled the Senate.

During the first period Republicans offered 306 amendments while the Democrats offered 311 amendments. The number of amendments were split evenly. To emphasize this point further, in 1981, 1983 and 1984 the Republicans offered more amendments during those years. While in 1982, 1985 and 1986 the Democrats offered more amendments. The even split was a mild surprise.

TABLE 3 REPUBLICAN\DEMOCRAT AMENDS - SENATE

I expected the Republicans to offer a lot more amendments than the Democrats because they were in control for the first time in a long while and the Republicans were a very close and cohesive party. There was no distinct pattern for which party offered the most amendments.

This changed only slightly when the Democrats controlled the Senate. Democrats offered 322 Republicans 295 amendments to the amendments. The differential between the number of amendments offered by the parties went from a plus five to a plus 27. In the first year of the second period both parties offered fifty eight amendments, and during the second year the Republicans offered three more amendments than the Democrats. The tide changed in 1989 and the Democrats offered more amendments than the Republicans in the last three year of the period.

(2) House

The Democrats offered four amendments to every one amendment offered by Republicans. Over the 12 year span, the Democrats offered 808 amendments or and average of 67.33 a year and the Republicans offered 213 amendments or an average of 17.75 a year(Table 4). Even though the House was controlled by the Democrats during this whole period it is important to divide the period up into two distinct periods. The first period is 1981 through 1984 when Rep. Price(D-II) was the chairman.

TABLE 4 REPUBLICAN/DEMOCRAT AMENDS - HOUSE

During this period Democrats offered 189 amendments, while Republicans offered 58 amendments. The Democrats offered on the average 20 less amendments per year during this four year span than they did over the whole twelve year period. The Republican average was down slightly to 14.5 amendments a year.

With a new chairman in 1985, The number of amendments offered by Democrats increased. Democrats offered 619 amendments over the last eight years, which averages out roughly to 77 amendments a year. While Republicans offered only 155 amendments or an average of 19 per year. But this period itself needs to be broken into two segments. The first segment is from 1985 through 1988. During this segment alone the Democrats offered 428 of their total 808 amendments and the Republicans offered 115 of their total 213 amendments. Both parties took advantage of a new chairman and offered a higher average of amendments than before. The Democrats offered an average of 107 amendments per year with a high of 116 in 1985, compared to an average of 47 amendments a year under the last four years of Chairman Price's tenure. Republican's average per year rose to 29 a year under the first four years of Mr. Aspin's tenure. Chairman Aspin strengthened his control starting in 1989, hence the number of amendments being offered decreased dramatically. The Democrats offered an average of 47.75 amendments per year, while the Republican average was only 10 per year.

b. Committee Member or Non-Committee Member

(1) House

As mentioned earlier it is important whether or not the amendments were offered by a committee member or a non-committee member. The Armed Services Committee in the House is much larger than its Senate counterpart, but its percentage of the total House was smaller than the total percentage of the Senate. The Armed Services Committee of the 97th Congress consisted of 45 members. The committee grew in both the 98th and 99th sessions of Congress when one new member was added in each session. The committee grew to 51 members in the 100th Congress and stayed that way for the 101st Congress. It grew again in 1991 with the 102nd Congress, to a size of 54. The Democrats had a majority of at least seven more members on the committee than did the Republicans.

offered 623 of the total 1021 amendments over the twelve year period. 61% of the amendments were offered by 11% of the House of Representatives. This percentage is slightly skewed because in a couple of the years the chairman offered several amendments en bloc and it padded the statistics. But this is still important because these amendments had to go through the chairman to reach the floor and to be accepted. It also shows that the committee and the chairman were in control of the Defense Authorization Bills.

(2) Senate

The Senate Armed Services Committee consists of Senators from both parties, but with the majority party having more members on the committee. The Armed Services Committee in the 97th Congress consisted of 17 Senators. The size of the committee grew in the 98th Congress to 18 and the to 19 in the 99th Congress. Today the Armed Services has 20 members and it has remained at this size since 1987. Armed Services Committee members offered 10 of the 21 total amendments that were offered. In otherwords, seventeen percent of the Senate offered 47.6% of the Amendments. This basic trend continued through out the eleven year period. Services Committee members offered 525 of the 1234 total amendments offered, or 42.55% of the amendments. significant because only 19% of the Senate offered 42% of the amendments while 81% of the Senate offered the remaining 58%. The Armed Services Committee showed over this period how much

3. Passage Rates

The passage rates of committee amendments versus noncommittee member and the passage rates of Democrat versus Republican offered amendments are also very important. In the case of Democrat versus Republican amendments you might see a power it had and it exercised it over this period.

higher passage rate for the party that is in control of the Senate or House. With committee member and non-committee member amendments you might see how the amendments offered by committee members pass at a higher rate, because the committee members have a greater knowledge of defense policy and its relationship to U.S. national interest.

a. Republican vs. Democrat

(1) Senate

Republican offered Amendments in the Senate passed at a rate of 58.9% over the eleven year period, while the amendments offered by democrats passed at a rate of As mentioned earlier the first six years of this 53.55%. period the Senate was controlled by the Republicans. During this six year span, Republican amendments passed at a rate that was 15 percentage points higher than Democrat amendments. This large difference in passage rates demonstrates that amendments offered by members of the party in control do pass at a higher rate. The differential between Democrat and Republican offered amendment's passage rates was reduced during the five years of Democrat control that was looked at to only three percentage points in favor of the Democrats. During this period 68.12% of the Democrat amendments passed compared to 65.17% passage of amendments offered by the Republicans. When comparing the passing rates of the two periods, the Republicans seem to have more party unity which leads to their higher passage rates and the low passage rates for the Democrat offered amendments while they were in control.

(2) House

In the House over the twelve year period (1981-1992), amendments offered by Democrats passed at a rate of 77.85% compared to the 62.44% rate that the Republican amendments passed at. First glance at these numbers might lead one to believe again that the amendments offered by the party in control passed at a higher rate. But the numbers alone do not tell the whole story. Republican amendments actually passed at a higher rate, 70.69%, than Democrat amendments, 58.73%, during 1981 and 1982. Things changed during Mr. Price's last two years, 1983 and 1984, as Chairman of the Armed Services Committee. The passage rates changed dramatically, and amendments offered by Democrats passed at a higher rate than Republican amendments. Rep. Price(D-II) was being pressured by the liberals within the party to vote more their way or he would lose his chairmanship. This did occur in 1985 as we know when Rep. Les Aspin(D-Wi) was selected as Chairman of the Armed Services Committee even though he was not the next senior member of the committee. During this eight year span Democrat offered amendments passed at a 83.68% clip, while Republican offered amendments passed at a rate of During this span the highest rate of passage of 59.35%.

Democrat offered amendments was 89.47% in 1990, while the lowest rate was 73.77% was in 1989. Ironically the lowest Republican passage rate was also in the same year as the Democrat's highest rate. The lowest rate was a paltry 9.09%, but the highest rate was 100% in 1992.

b. Committee Member vs. Non-Committee Member

(1) Senate

Amendments offered by Armed Services Committee members passed at an average of 58.67% in the Senate from 1981 through 1991. While the amendments offered by noncommittee members passed at an average of 52.75% over the same period. Committee member amendments passed at a rate of 54.55% while the Republicans were in control and they passed at a rate of 62.19% while the Democrats were in control. Noncommittee member amendments also passed at a lower rate, 48.8%, under the Republicans, while they passed at a rate of 57.19% under the Democrats. Comparing the passage rates between the six years of Republican and five years of Democrat control of the Senate shows that there was not a big difference when it comes to the passage rates of committee member offered amendments and non-committee amendments. This is a significant fact because overall there is only a six percentage point difference between the two types amendments. This shows that there is a lot of mutual respect in the Senate for all members and their respective amendments.

(2) House

In the House both committee member and non-committee member amendments passed at a higher rate than in the Senate. Committee member amendments passed at a rate of 80.09% over this twelve year period. While non-committee member amendments passed at a rate of 66.83%. This is significant because the differential between the two types of amendments was 14 percentage points while it was only six in the Senate. It seems that the amendments offered by committee members in the House were taken much more seriously than non-committee member amendments. In addition as mentioned earlier committee members, which are only 11% of the House, offered 61.02% of the amendments, it is important to know that 499 committee member amendments passed which is 100 more than the total number offered by non-committee members.

4. Chairman's Position

The last statistic that will be discussed is the most important statistic. This statistic is the final piece of the puzzle that proves that the chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees does have power. The statistic that I am talking about is the chairman's position on the amendments that passed and the amendments that were rejected. I will look at the combined total of the chairman's position on these amendments.

a. Senate

In the Senate, 692 of the 1,234 amendments that were offered from 1981 through 1991 passed. Of the 692 amendments that passed, the chairman voted for 668 of those amendments. That equates out to a rate of 96.53% of those amendments that the chairman wanted to pass did pass. When looking at the amendments that were rejected, you find that the chairman voted for the rejection of 513 of the 541 amendments that were eventually rejected. This equates to a rate of 94.82% of those amendments that the chairman wanted rejected. When adding the two together to get the total percentage of the chair's vote in the Senate which is 95.53% (Table 5). So 95.53% of the time the chairman's position on an amendment was the ultimate fate of that amendment.

b. House

The chairman voted for the passage of 96.97% of the amendments that passed. Again you see that if you want an amendment to pass, you will need the support of the chairman. However, the percentage of the chairman's vote for rejection is much lower in the House than in the Senate. Only 89.69% of the Amendments that the chairman did not want were defeated. But when combining the two again, 95.1% of the time the chairman's position on the amendment was the ultimate fate of the amendment (Table 6).

TABLE 5 TOTAL OF CHAIR VOTE - SENATE

TABLE 6 TOTAL OF CHAIR VOTE - HOUSE

5. The Results of the Empirical Analysis on Appropriations Bills

I also looked at the Defense Appropriation Bills in both the House and the Senate from 1981 through 1991. But I will treat it a little bit differently because there were only a combined total of 380 amendments offered in both the House and the Senate over the eleven year period. So I will treat the Appropriation Bills from both the House and the Senate as one total entity. During some of those years, there was no debate on a Defense Appropriation Bill in the Senate because they did not get to it done in time, so instead a continuing Appropriation Bill was debated on where they debated on appropriations for many government departments. With these bills I would find the amendments that dealt with the military and record them.

As mentioned above there were 380 amendments offered over the eleven year period. Three hundred and two of those amendments were offered in the Senate. While there were only 78 amendments offered in House over the same period. The total number of amendments combined stayed pretty steady on a year by year basis. The largest total of amendments offered for a given year was 73 in 1981 and the smallest total was nine in 1986. In the Senate the largest number of amendments offered for a given year was 54 in 1991 and the lowest total was nine in 1986. In the House the largest total of amendments offered in the House for a given year was 28 in 1981 and zero amendments in 1984, 1986 and 1987. In the three years that there were no amendments offered in the House, the Defense Appropriation Bills were voted on and accepted as there were written by the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations.

In the Senate, Republicans offered 126 amendments and the Democrats offered 176 amendments over the eleven year period. This is similar to split in amendments offered to the Defense Authorization Bills. The split in the House is also similar to the split found in amendments offered to the Defense Authorization Bills. Democrats offered 62 of the total 78 amendments offered in the House, while Republicans offered on 16 amendments over the eleven period.

As I did for the Defense Authorization Bills, I looked at the chairman's position on the amendment and compared that to the amendment's fate. 286 of the total 380 passed in the House and the Senate. The chairmen in the House and Senate voted for 272 of the 286 amendments that passed. That equates to a rate of 95.1% of the amendments that passed the chair voted for its passage. There were 92 amendments that were rejected. The chairmen voted for the rejection of 82 of the 92 that were rejected. So 89.13% of the amendments the chair wanted defeated were defeated. When adding the two together, 93.16% of the time the chair's position on the amendment was the ultimate fate of the amendment. In the end, it is quite apparent that the Chairmen of the Subcommittees on Defense Appropriations in both the House and Senate have power similar to that of the Chairmen of the Armed Services Committees in the House and Senate.

V. Conclusions

When I started out to work on this thesis, I wanted to prove that the chairmen of the defense committees still wield decisive power over the defense budgeting process. I believe I have easily accomplished that goal. But I also found out a lot of other interesting things that take place in the House and the Senate when it comes to the defense budget process.

Namely, I found out that there are a lot of differences between the House and the Senate when it comes to who offers the amendments. In the House, the party in control tends to dominate the proceedings. Over the 12 year period that I examined the Democrats, who were in control, offered 79% of the amendments offered to the Defense Authorization Bills. The percentage was the same for the number of amendments that Democrats offered to the Defense Appropriations Bills form 1981 through 1991. Furthermore, in the House it made a difference whether or not the Congressman was a member of the Armed Services Committee or not. House Armed Services Committee members offered 623 of the 1,021 amendments. found it quite interesting that only eleven percent of the House of Representatives offered 60% of the amendments. This shows that the Armed Services Committee in the House continues to be strong. It also demonstrates that the rest of the House believes in and respects the decisions of the committee members.

The Senate operates a little bit differently. that it did not matter what party was in control when it came to who offered the amendments. When the Republicans controlled the Senate from 1981 through 1986, the number of amendments offered by Republicans and Democrats to the Defense Authorization Bills were split evenly. The Democrats offered only five more amendments more that the Republicans over a six year period. Then when the Democrats controlled the Senate from 1987 through 1991, this trend basically continued. difference between the number of amendments offered by Democrats and Republicans increased to 27 in favor of the Democrats. But the increase was a small amount for a five I also found out that in the Senate that the year period. distribution of amendments offered the to Defense Authorization Bill was equal. In fact non-Armed Services Committee members actually offered more amendments than the committee members did. This is not to say that the Armed Services Committee is any less important or respected in the Senate, but that there is a lot of mutual respect in the Senate among the Senators and that there is no restriction on who offers an amendment.

When comparing the House to the Senate on who offers an amendment, I came to some conclusions. First, in the House because of its size and to the numerous commitments that they have due to the reforms of the 1970's, the members of the House rely and depend on the Armed Services Committee and their amendments as much as they did in the past. While in the Senate because of their respect for one another's knowledge on defense matters the non-committee members can and do offer as many or more amendments than committee members. This respect can also be seen when you look at and compare the passage rates of committee and non-committee member offered amendments. Committee member amendments passed at a rate that was only six percentage points higher than non-committee member amendments, where in the House committee member amendments passed at a rate 14 percentage points higher than non-committee member amendments did.

Secondly, in the House I feel that there is more parochialism than in the Senate. The parochialism that I am speaking of is where the amendments offered by the party in control pass at a higher rate than the minority party's amendments. The Democrats offered a lot more amendments than the Republicans in the House. Moreover, the amendments offered by the Democrats passed at a rate that was 15 percentage points higher than Republican amendments. This parochialism can be seen further when looking at the tenure of Rep. Les Aspin (D-Wi), when Democrat offered amendments passed at a rate that was 24 percentage points higher than the Republican rate. While in the Senate from 1981 through 1991, Republican amendments offered to the Defense Authorization

Bills passed at a rate that was five percentage points higher than amendments offered by Democrats. Nevertheless, this does not really tell the whole story. During the Republican controlled years in the Senate there was some parochialism, while during the years the Democrats were in control the difference between passage rates was the same as the overall rate but in favor of the Democrats.

My final and most important conclusion though comes from looking at how the chairmen voted on different types of amendments versus the actual passage rates of those amendments and looking at the percentage of the chair's vote for passage. rejection and the total of the chair's vote compared to the number that actually passed, rejected and the total. This conclusion is that the chairmen of the defense committees still wield considerable amounts of power.

The main reasons why I feel that the chairmen still have power are the percentage of the amendments that the chair votes for that actually pass, the percentage of the amendments that the chair votes for that actually are rejected and the total percentage of the chair's vote. In the Senate the chair voted for 96.53% of the amendments that passed and in the House the chair voted for 96.97% of the amendments that passed. This shows that most of the time the chair's support is needed for an amendment to pass. When it comes to the chair's vote for rejection, in the Senate 94.82% of the amendments that chair wanted to be rejected were rejected. In the House the percentage is lower but, 89.69% of the amendments the chair wanted to be rejected were rejected. The total of the chair's vote is the final statistic that proves that the chairmen still have power. 95.53% of the time the chairman's vote in the Senate was the ultimate fate of the amendment. The total of the chairman's vote in the House was just slightly lower at 95.1%.

So my final conclusion is that the chairmen of the House and Senate Armed Services Committees and to a lesser extent the chairmen of the Subcommittees on Defense Appropriations still wield a considerable amount of power in the defense budgeting process. This is important for several reasons. First, members in both the House and the Senate should realize this so if they want to get their amendment passed they need to have the support of the chairman. More importantly the Secretary of Defense and the leaders of the four services should understand that when they want something that is very important to them regarding the defense budget they, will primarily have to sell their desires to the chairman and the ranking minority member of the defense committees. They do not have to talk to each and every Senator or Congressman.
